EXPLANATORY NOTE

The advent of computer and information technology has facilitated economic growth as well as social development in major parts of the world. The so-called industrialized nations have relied much on technology to fast-track their industries and mechanized their agriculture.

In the Philippines, computer and information technology have similarly been considered as vital a tool in the realization of our dream of becoming a newly industrialized country (NIC), thus becoming part of the developing countries.

Hence, knowing the indispensable role of computer and information technology in the millennium of technological advances, the Philippines has, as a state policy, incorporated in its national development plan the increased level of computer and information technology training centers in major educational institutions in the country, is so essential to realize the nation's objective of producing well trained human resource to cope with world standards.

Thus, the imperative and urgent need for the establishment of an information and computer technology training center at the Ubay National Science High School, in Ubay Bohol is likewise in line with the President's 10-point key goals in bringing the country towards development.

In view of this, early approval of the measure is earnestly sought.
