HOUSE BILL NO. 3051

Introduced by Representative Nanette Castelo Daza

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Prostitutes and prostitution are viewed as one and the same the common understanding being that prostitution involves the sale of sexual services by women and children. Unfortunately, this view reveals no understanding of prostitution as a system and of prostitutes as individuals caught up in that system. When prostitution is mentioned, the focus is right away on women and children who provide the sexual services. Yet on this point, society has a set bias. It will easily see the predicament of children and readily condemn those who duped them. The society continue to see the adult women as free and autonomous persons who enter into individual and private transactions with their customers. It will automatically assume that an adult women is on equal footing with the other party involved in the transaction and therefore free to set the conditions of that transaction.

Prostitution is a system where the major players are mostly men or their representatives, and where women and children assume the functional role of delivering sexual services and the intended profits. Prostitution is based on the notion that men are entitled to sexual services from women and children, and can, in fact, demand these services as a matter of right services. Precisely, women and children are recruited into prostitution to cater to this demand. This fact is often overlooked.

As it stands, the Philippine law plays a key role in the proliferation of prostitution. Note that the law does not define "prostitution" but is explicit in defining "prostitutes" and in identifying them as women in Article 22, paragraph 5 of the Revised Penal Code. In reality, it is difficult to prosecute any woman for being a prostitute because under the law the following elements must be proven: 1. Engaging in sexual intercourse or lascivious conduct; 2. Habituality of the conduct; and 3. Payment of money or profit. Law enforcers have therefore turned to other existing laws to arrest and prosecute women involved in prostitution. Among these are laws penalizing vagrants, obscene publications and lewd shows.

It is evident that the law considers indecent and immoral, the sale of sex by women and thus deserving of criminal sanction. Sex for hire is indecent because women are not supposed to engage in sex sale. Yet the same norms do not hold true for men. Society considers men as sexually active than women. It is in fact, considered natural or practically necessary for men to satisfy their sexual needs and doing so by employing the sexual services of women. So while the law penalizes and ostracizes women in prostitution, men are left free of the crime. Not to mention that the criminal liability of individuals engaged in business of prostitution under Article 341 of the Revised Penal Code is hardly enforced. Businesses engaged in prostitution continue to increase.

Prostitution must be approached in its entirety, dealing on both the structural mechanisms and the ideological justifications which uphold it. In dealing with prostitution, the government must focus and address the contradictions in policies which in effect, reinforce the system of prostitution. The adult-child divide must be removed and women and children in prostitution must be decriminalized alike. Our goal of minimizing, if not totally eradicating prostitution, must be directed against establishments and male customers who control and profit from the business of prostitution. Policies and programs must be developed and these must address the problems of women and children, provide them protection, penalize those who control, perpetuate, and benefit from the business of prostitution, and address the factors in general to totally eradicate prostitution even in the long term.

In view of the foregoing, immediate passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
