FIFTEENTH CONGRESS
Second Regular Session

House Bill No. 6126

Introduced by Representatives
DIOSDADO MACAPAGAL ARROYO and GLORIA MACAPAGAL ARROYO

AN ACT
CREATING AND ESTABLISHING THE INSTITUTE FOR STRATEGIC STUDIES AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The present turn of events in the international scene has made it even more imperative the conduct of policy research and strategic studies. Such events range from domestic and international, political, economic and others of profound significance which have raised numerous and remarkable challenges for the Philippines. Coupled with advances in the technical field especially in communications, information and transportation, this has emphasized the reality of the times which is the interdependence of nations.

This brings to fore the fact that there will be intense competition for scarce resources even though massive military confrontations against nations have become unlikely. It has been predicted that the Asia-Pacific region will be an area of concern in this regard.

In many parts of Asia, continued territorial conflicts may spark many interstate tensions. As a result, some states continue to discreetly build vast arsenals of weapons in preparation of another arms race and more importantly, to secure the safety of their territories.

The contending claims of several states over a portion of the Spratly islands by the South China Sea the Philippines included may result in armed confrontation if not addressed diplomatically.

In the country, we are beset by a continuing insurgency problem. The local communist movement remains a clear and present danger to national security. On the other side, we find the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), together with terrorist organizations, like the break-away bandit group, Abu Sayyaf, whose activities continue to shake the country's political stability.

With all these concerns, there is clearly an urgent need to conduct scientific and continued policy research and strategic studies to come up with concrete and sustainable courses of action to address the country's fundamental and critical national concerns.

The proposed bill mandates the conduct of strategic study work which includes, among other things, the:

- (1) conduct of strategic research on national and international concerns;
- (2) formulation of various policy options on various national concerns; and
- (3) recommendation of appropriate actions to support such policies and strategies.

The bill also specifies that a selected expert/scholar-members group shall be mandated to be the lead in the conduct of such strategic study work.

Given the importance of this measure, we therefore enjoin our colleagues to support such measure and ensure its immediate passage into law.
