House Bill No. _____

Introduced by Congressman Dakila Carlo E. Cua

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The Philippines, in recent years has received a couple of credit rating upgrades, the latest of which was in July when the country received a "BBB" to "BBB+" from the Japan Credit Rating Agency (JCR) and Fitch ratings. These accomplishments were the output of a generally stable political situation, strong remittances from abroad and improving fiscal position. Hence, to further strengthen and improve economic stability, the Aquino government is committed to implement stronger administrative reforms and pass identified priority legislative measures that will help ease the investments constraints and facilitate simplicity in doing business in the country.

One of these priority measures is the need to harmonize the regulatory and tax framework for all forms of Collective Investment Schemes (CIS). Countries, including the United Kingdom, Japan, Australia, Korea and Singapore, have adopted a single law to regulate all types of CIS. Presently, the Philippines has various laws governing investment companies (mutual funds), unit investment trust funds ("UITFs"), and separate account funds or variable unit linked insurance products.

These investment products are basically the same but differ in regulatory requirements (regulatory arbitrage) and taxation mainly because of differences in their governing laws. This regulatory and tax arbitrage give rise to an uneven playing field which will prove unfavorable to the growth of the industry. More importantly, such arbitrage will result in uneven levels of protection to the investing public.

Establishing a comprehensive regulatory and tax framework for all CIS products will eventually lead to a more competitive environment for the CIS industry and provide enhanced and uniform levels of protection to the investing public.

This is also relevant in making the Philippines competitive in the light of ASEAN integration. The ASEAN CIS framework allows units of an ASEAN CIS authorized in its domicile of the CIS (home jurisdiction) to be offered in other participating countries (host jurisdiction) under a streamlined authorization process, provided that the ASEAN CIS satisfies the set of common standards.

In view of the foregoing, approval of this bill is earnestly sought.
