AN ACT DECRIMINALIZING ADULTERY AND CONCUBINAGE, REPEALING FOR THIS PURPOSE ARTICLES 333 AND 334 OF THE REVISED PENAL CODE

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Under the Revised Penal Code (RPC), extramarital affairs committed by married men and women are considered criminal acts but not treated equally. Under Article 333 of the RPC, a wife can be convicted of a crime of adultery for a single act of sexual intercourse with a man who is not her husband, while under Article 334, the husband can only be convicted of a crime of concubinage if he is found guilty of any of the following: (1) keeping a mistress in the conjugal dwelling; (2) having sexual intercourse under scandalous circumstances with a woman who is not his wife; or (3) cohabiting with her in any other place.

The husband needs only to prove that his wife engaged in sexual intercourse with a man, not her husband. In contrast, the wife needs to show that her husband's sexual intercourse with another woman was "under scandalous circumstances." And, under the third circumstance, when concubinage is committed, it is not enough that the husband is keeping a paramour in another house. It must be shown that the husband lives with the paramour in that house.

Articles 333 and 334 of the RPC, which criminalize marital infidelity (that of having sexual intercourse with a person other than his/her spouse), clearly discriminates against women spouses. The abolition of this stricter moral standard on fidelity on married women vis-a-vis their male counterparts, which standard was set in the 1930s when the RPC took effect, is long overdue.

Consultations with, and cases referred to, GABRIELA Alliance of Filipino Women show that in practice, Articles 333 and 334 are often resorted to only as "bargaining suits" to get the other party in a nullity petition to "cooperate" or to give in during support negotiations. While pursued in the initial stages, these suits are often withdrawn or dismissed. Worse, separated or abandoned wives, who have no remedy under the law in the absence of divorce, are always under constant threat of suit from their estranged husbands. Their estranged husbands blackmail them through Article 333 of the RPC. While they may also have grounds to file under Article 334, they face the difficulty of proving the crime due to the inherent difficulty in the standards set by the law. In many cases, women faced with these threats are forced to forgo legitimate custodial claims of their children, while some are forced to give up their claims over conjugal properties, assets, and the like.

In view of the foregoing, the passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
