HOUSE BILL NO. 2248

Introduced by Representative Stella Luz A. Quimbo

AN ACT DECLARING MARCH 15 OF EVERY YEAR AS NATIONAL FRONTLINERS' DAY

EXPLANATORY NOTE

In January 2020, the Philippines recorded the first case of COVID-19. From then on, the number of cases began to increase and since the early parts of March 2020, there has never been a day where the country does not record a case. This means COVID-19 patients are rushed to the hospital each day while medical professionals do their utmost to save as many lives as they can.

Many of these human resources for health are overworked and underpaid. Worse, per the Filipino Nurses United, about 30,000 health workers have yet to receive several months of salary, hazard pay, and special risk allowance.¹ The delays in their compensation further aggravates the already dire situation that these workers are in. There have been reports of health care workers who succumbed to COVID before even getting their measly hazard pay. These brave men and women sacrifice their safety and their lives so that others may live.

As of August 2020, more than 6,000 health workers have contracted the virus.² Of this figure, 40 have died. Certainly, many of the country's health workers could have opted to leave their jobs, go abroad, or transfer to a different field where there are better opportunities away from the threat of the virus. As the Filipinos have seen, however, these workers altruistically stayed in their jobs, at the expense of their safety, because of the call of duty.

Aside from the health workers, those who belong to other sectors also fight the pandemic by keeping the economy running. They ensure people's safety from the virus and from other sources of harm. Military and police personnel, bank workers, logistics and delivery workers, storekeepers, security guards, utility personnel, media workers, and countless others who have devoted their time, effort, and lives so that the several crucial sectors of the economy may survive the challenges brought by the pandemic.

At present, the country is in a war but a different one from those it fought in the last century. Then, the arena was the strategic battlefields, now the arena is the emergency rooms, the ICUs, and the wards. Then, armed forces were deployed to fight the opposing armies, now, medical professionals are being deployed to beat the invisible enemy. Both groups of men and women deployed in these different types of war are, at one point or another, frontliners. Just as the veterans and heroes of the World War II are commemorated through a holiday, the Day of Valor (April 9), so must Congress enact a working holiday law to pay tribute to the priceless and immeasurable act of sacrifice performed by the COVID-19 frontliners.

This measure does not aim to fully repay the blood and sweat shed by the frontliners but it does give them the recognition and the apposite tribute they so deserve. In view of the foregoing, the passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
