TWENTIETH CONGRESS

First Regular Session

House Bill No. 1190

Introduced by Representative

BRIAN DANIEL POE LLAMANZARES, PhD, MNSA

AN ACT CREATING THE DEPARTMENT OF DISASTER RESILIENCE, DEFINING ITS POWERS AND FUNCTIONS, AND APPROPRIATING FUNDS THEREFOR

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Republic Act No. 10121 or the Philippine Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Act of 2010 defined the powers of the National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Council, which is composed of different members from different departments of the executive branch, with the Office of Civil Defense acting as its secretariat.

As can be seen by its performance in recent disasters, the composition of the council slows down government preparation and response to these disasters. Thus, there is a need to create a separate department dedicated to disaster risk reduction and management.

The Department of Disaster Resilience (the Department), once established by law, shall possess the necessary powers and functions, along with the technical expertise and government support to carry out its mandate. The Department shall initiate and integrate the crafting and implementation of comprehensive, continuous, and strategic plans, programs and projects aimed at reducing the risk of all types of natural hazards and the harmful effects of climate change, with the primordial goal of ensuring the safety of our fellow Filipinos.

The bill identifies three (3) key result areas to be focused upon by the Department upon its establishment: (1) Disaster Risk Reduction; (2) Disaster Preparedness and Response; and (3) Recovery and Building Forward Better. As such, the Department shall be armed with all the necessary powers by which it can effectively address these key result areas.

The bill likewise authorizes the Department to exercise such emergency powers and remedial measures that will be necessary to provide for a timely response mechanism during, and in the aftermath of, a natural calamity or disaster. These powers and measures shall be granted to the Department primarily to help mitigate the unavoidable consequences of natural disasters, and to help alleviate any future harm that may be suffered by our fellow Filipinos.

The bill also recognizes the importance of utilizing present, as well as future, developments in information technology as a means of achieving the Department's primary functions. For instance, the bill requires the Department to establish an Integrated Disaster Resilience Information System (IDRIS), which shall serve as a national database of all relevant disaster risk reduction and climate change data. The bill also tasks the Department with the creation of an early warning system which shall make use of risk communication protocols to ensure effective and efficient measures to prepare for, respond to, and recover from present and potential risks and disasters.

In terms of disaster relief and response operations, the bill seeks to streamline the process with the establishment of a Humanitarian Assistance Action Center (HAAC), which shall serve as a mechanism for the processing and release of goods, articles, equipment and services, including international relief efforts.

Furthermore, the bill also highlights the involvement of other government agencies and instrumentalities, such as the various Local Government Units (LGUS), as well as civic society organizations and the communities that are in threat of being affected by natural calamities in addressing issues relating to disaster preparedness, prevention, reparation, and relief.

As a final note, this bill strives to help ensure that the painful lessons learned from typhoons such as Ondoy and Yolanda, as well as natural disasters that befell our country in past, are translated into laws, systems, structures, and policies that are truly responsive, with the ultimate goal of protecting the present and future generations of Filipinos.

The passage of the bill is earnestly sought.
