HOUSE BILL NO. 4289

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The 1987 Philippine Constitution mandates the State to “protect and promote the right to health of the people and instill health consciousness among them” (Article II, Section 15) and to “make essential goods, health and other social services available to all the people at affordable cost” (Article XIII, Section 11). It likewise recognizes the need to provide adequate social services, promote full employment, and guarantee protection to workers (Article II, Section 9 and Article XIII, Section 3).

In pursuit of these constitutional mandates, Republic Act No. 7883 or the “Barangay Health Workers’ Benefits and Incentives Act of 1995,” which recognized the vital role of Barangay Health Workers (BHWs) in the delivery of primary health care at the community level was enacted. However, three decades since its passage, RA No. 7883 has become inadequate in addressing the evolving needs of BHWs as well as the health challenges of the present time.

BHWs play a critical role in achieving universal healthcare and community well-being. They bridge the gap between formal health institutions and the grassroots, assisting in health education, disease prevention, maternal and child care, immunization campaigns, data gathering, and disaster response operations. The value of their contributions became especially evident during the COVID-19 pandemic. Despite this, many continue to receive minimal or irregular honoraria, inadequate health and social protection, and limited access to training and career development opportunities. Studies, such as the one conducted by the Ateneo de Manila University, have shown that BHWs themselves highlight the importance of receiving adequate financial support and access to continuous training in order to enhance their competence and boost their confidence in carrying out their wide-ranging responsibilities.¹ Similarly, a study published in Acta Medica Philippina (University of the Philippines Manila) found that BHWs remain largely undervalued in the health value chain, as they are often treated as least priority or merely as volunteers rather than regular workers. As a result, they receive only honoraria or allowances, which are unstandardized, insufficient, and frequently delayed.²

Hence, this bill seeks to establish a Magna Carta for BHWs, which not only institutionalizes their registration and accreditation and defines their roles and responsibilities, but also their incentives and benefits including honoraria, hazard allowance, subsistence and transportation allowances, health insurance, educational opportunities, civil service eligibility, and free legal services, among others.

This proposal not only aids the socio-economic wellbeing of the BHWs but also affirms the State's mandates to guarantee the efficient delivery of primary healthcare in our communities.

In view of the foregoing, the immediate passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
