EXPLANATORY NOTE

“Contraband in correctional facilities includes illegal items, such as drugs and weapons, or items prohibited in the area being monitored, such as cell phones. Prison staff needs to be able to detect and confiscate contraband quickly to prevent drug abuse, violence and the commission of further crimes.

Drugs and weapons pose a particular risk in prison environments, where there is a high potential for violence and drug abuse. Incarcerated individuals can use cell phones to help smuggle in drugs and weapons, organize attempts to escape, or order crimes to be committed inside or outside the prison.”¹

Time and again, despite regulations put in place, contrabands in incredible quantities are discovered creatively hidden – or not – within our prisons. This speaks to the ineptitude – or possibly corruption – of our prison officials.

Alarmingly, the series of raids conducted by the Department of Justice together with the agents of the National Bureau of Investigation and the officers of the Bureau of Corrections (BuCor), the Philippine National Police (PNP), and the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA) uncovered a cache of highpowered firearms and cash in the prisoners’ quarters and proved that the New Bilibid Prison has in fact become a hub of continuing criminality. More incredulously, some high-profile drug dealers actually also enjoy amenities like air-conditioned rooms with TV sets, Wi-Fi, refrigerators, Jacuzzis and sauna, hi-tech entertainment systems, concert equipment, aquariums, bar and kitchen and back-up power generators, making a clear travesty of the justice system.

Such convicts also were seen wearing expensive jewelry, and carrying bundles of cash, as if they were still living the way they used to, and not serving sentence in the national penitentiary.

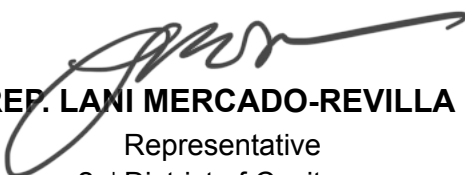

The discovery puts into question the supposed strict constraints and policing, stringent inspection, and very visible police presence within the national penitentiary if such proved ineffective in deterring inmates from hoarding, using or generating income from contrabands, and their cahoots from bringing them inside the prisons. The elephant in the room needs to be addressed: what were the officials doing?

More than the mockery of our penal system, too, we should be concerned for the safety of other prisoners who do not actually engage in such activities.

This proposed measure aims to put a stop to the monkey business taking place inside our prison facility by penalizing those who would provide, assist, aid or abet in the introduction of any prohibited object or contraband inside a prison facility, along with the inmate who makes, possesses or obtains or attempts to make or obtain the same inside the prison facility, and imposing a stiff penalty for its commission.

It is obvious that a stiff penalty is called for to instill fear and be an effective deterrence to the convicts and their accessories, as well to government officials or employees who cooperate or co-opt with the inmate or other private persons involved.

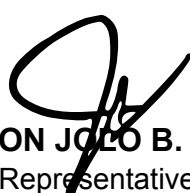

For the reasons abovesited, the immediate passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
